

First published in New York Tyrant, April 6, 2018. Copyright 2018 by Tetman Callis.

Metronome

He walks every morning to the Evanston outhouse. There he turns and walks back.

•

He spends every night sipping bitter tea from tiny white cups. A woman who never grows old sits with him. Together they fend off meaning and sleep.

•

The fog is heavy over the lake. Gulls scream. Water drips from the sky.